1 say I have about 40 pages done. Some work on the 2 facts, some on the procedural, and then some work on 3 a couple of issues that we worked on last time. Let 4 me talk to you a little bit about a couple of them.
5 I don't think my views have changed on two of them
6 that I've worked on, but give you a little bit more 7 thought as I put this together.

8 Let me start with the first issue in the 9 motion to dismiss, which is the preemptive scope of 10 the FTC's consent order authorizing Santa Fe 11 Tobacco's use of the terms "natural" and 12 "additive-free." The question being whether the 13 FTC's consent order authorizing Santa Fe Tobacco's 14 use of "additive-free" and other substantially 15 similar terms, "natural," impliedly preempts the 16 plaintiffs' claims to the extent they rely upon a 17 safer cigarette theory; i.e., that they were misled 18 into believing that the NAS cigarettes are safer than 19 alternatives.

20 What I understand the defendants to be 21 arguing is that this theory, if it's successful, 22 would pose a direct obstacle to the purposes and 23 objectives of federal policy, as manifested by the 24 order, and primarily relying on page 11 of their 25 motion to dismiss, and their reliance specifically on

1 the Tenth Circuit's decision in United States Airways
2 versus O'Donnell, a 2010 decision.

3 As I indicated when we were here together
4 on June 9, I continue to disagree that the consent
5 order preempts the plaintiffs' safer cigarette 6 theory, and am still inclined to deny the motion to 7 dismiss as to that theory.

8 Preemption analysis begins with the 9 assumption that the historic police powers of the 10 states are not to be superseded by federal law unless 11 that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress.
12 And that's Medtronic. And then in the Cipollone 13 versus Liggett Group cases, again, they applied a, 14 quote, "presumption against the preemption of state 15 police power regulations." As the Supreme Court has 16 repeatedly stated, Congress' -- or in this case a 17 federal agency's -- intent, in preemption analysis, 18 intent is the "ultimate touchstone." And Wyeth 19 versus Levine says that.

20 Here, customer protection law, including 21 cigarette advertising regulations, is a field that's 22 traditionally reserved for the state's historic 23 police powers. Some of these cases get a little old, 24 but talk about that. But in Packer Corp. versus 25 State of Utah the Supreme Court said, "The state may

1 under the police power regulate the business of 2 selling tobacco products and advertising connected 3 therewith." So to prevail on their motion to 4 dismiss, the defendants must overcome a strong 5 presumption against preemption. That's what 6 Cipollone says.

7 Preemption may be express or implied. The 8 Gade case makes that clear. As relevant here, 9 implied conflict preemption occurs where, quote, 10 "compliance with both federal and state regulation is 11 a physical impossibility," Florida Lime and Avocado 12 Growers, which is an older case says that. Or even 13 an older case, Hines versus Davidowitz, where state 14 law "stands" -- I'm quoting again -- "as an obstacle 15 to the accomplishment and execution of the full 16 purposes and objectives of Congress." Justice
17 Thomas, in his concurring opinion in Pharmacy
18 Research and Manufacturers said, "Obstacle preemption 19 turns on whether the goals of a federal statute are 20 frustrated by the effect of the state law." And 21 whether an obstacle is sufficient for preemption 22 purposes "is a matter of judgment, to be informed by 23 examining the federal law as a whole and identifying 24 its purpose and intended effects." The Tenth Circuit 25 said that in the Barber case. As with all forms of

1 preemption, the Supreme Court has emphasized the need 2 for clear intent when applying obstacle preemption.

3 And the Supreme Court said that as recently as 2012,
4 in Arizona versus United States.

5 The defendants rely on a handful of cases 6 which they contend establish the consent order, such 7 as the one at issue here, have preemptive effect.
8 And they rely, among others, on the Feikema versus 9 Texaco case from the Fourth Circuit, and GMC case
10 from the Second Circuit. Again, those are 1990
11 cases. The defendants, for example, quote the Fourth 12 Circuit statement in Feikema that when an agency -- 13 and I'm quoting -- "acting with invalid statutory 14 authority enters a consent order, that order will 15 also preempt conflicting state regulation, including 16 a federal court order based on state common law."
17 That's a quote from Feikema that's right in the 18 motion to dismiss. The defendants also quote the 19 Second Circuit's case in GMC that an FTC, quote, 20 "consent order reflecting a reasonable policy choice 21 of a federal agency and issued pursuant to 22 congressional grant of authority may preempt state 23 legislation."

24 Other courts have -- rightly in my view -- 25 criticized these cases' suggestion that consent

1 decrees may foreclose the rights of nonparties. In 2 Wabash Valley Power Association, from the Seventh 3 Circuit, Judge Easterbrook said that, quote, "because 4 neither the state nor the consumers were parties to 5 the FTC's case in GMC versus Abrams, it is hard to 6 understand how the decree could blot out their claims 7 based on state law." Judge Easterbrook reasoned 8 that, rather, I'm quoting, "whether the decree has 9 such an effect should depend on whether it was 10 adopted by the agency as its own policy following the 11 procedures the APA requires; then the preemption 12 would come from substantive rules rather than the 13 parties' assent." Easterbrook cited an older case, 14 United States v. AT&T, saying that an antitrust 15 consent decree may preempt state law when the states 16 have had an opportunity to intervene and their 17 contentions have been resolved on the merits. Here, 18 the consent decree was issued without full notice or 19 opportunity for comment, or pursuant to informal 20 procedures described by the APA. It was thus not 21 adopted by the FTC as, quote, using Easterbrook's 22 words, "as its own policy following the procedures 23 the APA requires."

24 Also illustrative are the Fourth Circuit's 25 own subsequent statements limiting the scope of its

1 analysis in Feikema versus Texaco. Specifically
2 Cavallo versus Star Enterprise. Again, these are a
3 little bit older cases, but in 1996, in the Cavallo
4 case, the Fourth Circuit stated that an entity, 5 quote, "cannot be held liable for activities in 6 conformity" -- and that word is emphasized in the 7 Fourth Circuit's own language -- "with the EPA 8 orders," but held "that does not end the inquiry" 9 whether a consent order preempts a third-party action 10 based on state law. The Fourth Circuit stated that, 11 quote, "damages claims conflict with a consent 12 decree, and are thus preempted, only if the allegedly 13 tortious activities (1) were required, directed, or 14 supervised by the agency, and (2) were performed 15 properly." The Fourth Circuit added that, with 16 respect to the plaintiffs' claims in that case, 17 "incidents of improper operation, supervision, 18 management, design, installation, repair, and 19 updating of the waste site or its equipment may be 20 actionable if not compelled by the EPA orders." 21 Here, the defendants are not "required, directed, or 22 supervised by" the FTC with respect to their use of 23 the terms "additive-free" or "natural." The FTC's 24 consent order did not compel Santa Fe Tobacco to use 25 those terms in their advertising or cigarette

1 packaging; rather, it simply authorized the use of 2 those terms if they were accompanied by a subsequent 3 disclosure. Judge Vazquez, in her Altria case, 4 Mulford, said, "The FTC found the use of such 5 descriptors permissible if they were accompanied by 6 disclosure." And I think that's what's going on 7 here. Thus, even relying on the defendants' cases, 8 the consent order is not preemptive of the 9 plaintiffs' safer cigarette theory.

10 The Second Circuit has also clarified that 11 consent decrees, although binding on the parties, do 12 not preempt third-party claims. In 1999, in United 13 States v. City of New York, the Second Circuit rather 14 plainly stated that, quote, "those who are not 15 parties to a consent decree are free to challenge the 16 decree and actions taken under it." In reaching this 17 conclusion, the Second Circuit relied upon 18 well-settled Supreme Court precedent and a -- and I'm 19 quoting here from Martin versus Wilks, that "a 20 judgment or decree among parties to a lawsuit 21 resolves issues as among them, but it does not 22 conclude the rights of strangers to those 23 proceedings." I realize Martin has been somewhat 24 superseded by some civil rights litigation, but I 25 think on that point it was only superseded as some

1 employment-related claims.

2 In going back to Wabash, Easterbrook said,
3 "Martin v. Wilks holds that a consent decree may not 4 foreclose the rights of nonparties." And the Supreme 5 Court again reaffirmed this principle in 2008, in the 6 Altria Group versus Good case. "A consent order is 7 in any event only binding on the parties to the 8 agreement." The defendants respond that this 9 analysis is inapposite, because Santa Fe Tobacco was 10 a party to the consent decree. That consent decree 11 binds Santa Fe Tobacco, however, but that doesn't 12 mean it binds third parties who had no opportunity to 13 intervene or state their positions as to the subject 14 matter.

15 Further, as Second Circuit stated in GMC
16 versus Abrams, quote, "the mere fact that the instant 17 order has been entered, however, is insufficient to 18 preclude supplemental state regulation." Rather, and 19 again quoting, "as with any preemption analysis, the 20 lodestar of our inquiry is the intent of the FTC in 21 entering into the consent order." And there, the 22 Second Circuit cited California Federal Savings from 23 the Supreme Court. It's difficult to see how the 24 consent order is designed to preempt any third-party 25 state law claims. According to the defendants, the

1 FTC intended in the consent order to conclusively 2 establish that certain terms are not misleading, thus 3 preempting any state law actions alleging the 4 contrary. But I don't read the consent order to 5 evince such intent. The consent order simply states
6 that the FTC, quote, "shall not prohibit" close 7 quote, Santa Fe Tobacco from using "additive-free" 8 and similar terms. And to me, such language does not 9 evince an intent to foreclose state law actions 10 alleging misleading advertising practices.

11 Let me give a few comments also on the 12 second issue in the motion to dismiss, and that is 13 the issue on the First Amendment protection. Under 14 the Central Hudson framework for commercial speech, 15 the question as I understand it is: Do the 16 plaintiffs plausibly allege that the defendants'
17 representations that their Natural American Tobacco 18 cigarettes are "natural," "organic," and 19 "additive-free," are not protected commercial speech 20 under the First Amendment? And I said I thought that 21 was the case on June 9. And my research continues to 22 make me believe that's the right inclination here.

23 As we know from Ashcroft and Twombly, the 24 claim is facially plausible, quote, "when the pleaded 25 factual content allows the court to draw the 1 reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for 2 the misconduct alleged." Accepting the facts alleged 3 in the plaintiffs' complaint as true, and taken in 4 the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, the 5 plaintiffs' complaint plausibly alleges that the 6 defendants' representations are not protected

7 commercial speech. It is plausible that the terms 8 "natural," "organic," and "additive-free" are 9 inherently misleading and not merely potentially 10 misleading or truthful. It's also plausible that the 11 defendants' advertising scheme, as a whole, is 12 inherently misleading. The plaintiffs' complaint, I
13 think, bypasses the full Central Hudson balancing 14 test. So accepting the facts alleged in the 15 plaintiffs' complaint as true, and taken in the light 16 most favorable to the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs'
17 complaint plausibly alleges sufficient facts to meet 18 the three prongs of the Central Hudson balancing 19 test. Accordingly, the Court is still inclined to 20 deny the motion to dismiss that claim.

21 Commercial speech is defined as "speech
22 that does no more than propose a commercial 23 transaction." We learned that from Virginia State 24 Board of Pharmacy, and also from Central Hudson, in 25 1980. In Central Hudson, "The Commission's order

1 restricts only commercial speech; that is, expression 2 related solely to the economic interests of the 3 speaker and its audience." The following 4 characteristics indicate that the speech is 5 commercial speech: If the speech is contained in an 6 advertisement; two, if it is made with an economic 7 motive; or three, if it refers to a specific product.
8 The Tenth Circuit said that in Procter & Gamble
9 versus Haugen. A representation, however, is not 10 automatically commercial speech because it contains 11 one or more of the preceding characteristics. Again, 12 the Tenth Circuit emphasized that in Procter &
13 Gamble.

14 Central Hudson provides an analytical 15 framework to determine what kind of commercial speech 16 is entitled to First Amendment protection. The 17 Constitution, quote, "accords a lesser protection to 18 commercial speech than to other constitutionally 19 guaranteed expression." The government has less 20 power to regulate lawful and nonmisleading commercial 21 speech. Therefore, the Court must perform a 22 threshold inquiry, before proceeding to the Central 23 Hudson balancing test, to determine whether the 24 speech is protected commercial speech, nonmisleading
25 speech that concerns lawful activity. And the Tenth

1 Circuit said that in the Revo case in 1997.

2 The plaintiffs plausibly allege that the 3 defendants' representations are inherently
4 misleading. Supreme Court jurisdiction has drawn 5 distinctions between misleading commercial speech, 6 potentially misleading commercial speech, and 7 nonmisleading commercial speech. The Supreme Court 8 drew those distinctions in the RMJ case. The 9 citation that I drew that from indicates that the 10 statement of the law is included in a summary of 11 commercial speech, quote, "in the context of 12 advertising for professional services." Circuit 13 courts, however, generally do not seem to find this a 14 notable distinction and have applied the case to 15 other areas of commercial speech.

16 I couldn't find a Tenth Circuit case that 17 had done that, but there are number of other circuit
18 cases, including the Sixth Circuit in a tobacco case.
19 So that is one area I'll have to explore to make sure 20 I'm comfortable with it, but I did notice that we 21 didn't have a Tenth on that.

22 Misleading commercial speech may be 23 prohibited entirely, according to RMJ. The Central 24 Hudson balancing test applies when the speech is 25 potentially misleading or when it is truthful.

1 States may impose restrictions when "the particular 2 content or method of the advertising suggests that it 3 is inherently misleading" or when it is truthful.
4 Both RMJ and Revo say that. States may impose 5 restrictions when "the particular content or method 6 of advertising suggests that it is inherently 7 misleading or when experience has proved that in fact 8 such advertising is subject to abuse." Again, that's 9 from the RMJ case. And this is what the Supreme 10 Court states in RMJ: "The particular content or 11 method of the advertising suggests that it is 12 inherently misleading," and then I emphasize this 13 language, "or when experience has proved that in fact 14 such advertising is subject to abuse." The Fourth 15 Circuit -- the Ninth Circuit has stated in American 16 Academy of Pain Management that when "advertising is 17 inherently likely to deceive" -- and again, I 18 emphasize this language -- "or where the record 19 indicates that a particular form or method of 20 advertising has in fact been deceptive," the 21 advertising enjoys no First Amendment protection.
22 These statements almost seem to indicate that the 23 defendants' arguments are not ripe at the motion to 24 dismiss stage, when the Court must assume the 25 complaint's assertions to be true. The Tenth Circuit

1 states that it's a particular mode of communication 2 is inherently misleading when it is "capable of being 3 presented in a way that is not deceptive." That was 4 from Revo.

5 Speech that is not inherently misleading
6 can be potentially misleading. Peel from the Supreme 7 Court has said that. Commercial speech devoid of 8 intrinsic meaning can still be inherently misleading, 9 especially if such speech has historically been used 10 to mislead the public. Factually true statements may 11 be misleading if they invite inferences that lead to 12 a conclusion lacking support or rigorous review. The 13 Supreme Court said in Peel, "We must assume that some 14 consumers will infer from petitioner's statement that 15 his qualifications in the area of civil trial 16 advocacy exceed the general qualifications for 17 admission to a state bar. Thus, if the certification 18 had been issued by an organization that had made no 19 inquiry into petitioner's fitness, or by one that 20 issues certificates indiscriminately for a price, the 21 statement, even if true, could be misleading." D.C.
22 Circuit in Pearson has said disclaimers alone do not 23 necessarily cure misleading advertising, suggesting 24 the possibility that some advertising is so 25 misleading that it is incurable by disclaimer.

1 So going back to Central Hudson, the
2 plaintiffs plausibly allege that the defendants'
3 representations are, quote, "inherently misleading."
4 For example, the plaintiffs have noted that, despite 5 the defendants' disclaimers, the FTC has still sent 6 warning letters to the defendants that indicate that 7 the advertising is misleading. Defendants contend in 8 their motions and memoranda that it's impossible for 9 the term "natural" and "organic" to be "inherently 10 misleading" when there is no discernable standard for 11 "natural." Terms that lack "intrinsic meaning" can 12 be -- again, going back to Peel -- inherently 13 misleading, however, especially if such speech has 14 historically been used to mislead the public. The 15 complaint contains conclusory allegations regarding 16 the history of deception in tobacco advertising, but 17 the complaint also cites a number of studies 18 demonstrating deception over a period of time. The 19 defendants claim that their disclaimers; i.e., "no 20 additives in our tobacco does not mean a safer 21 cigarette," makes it impossible to mislead customers 22 into thinking that the cigarette is safe. But 23 Pearson indicates that disclaimers by themselves, 24 however, do not always cure misleading advertising.

25 As for the term "additive-free," defendants

1 contend that it's impossible to mislead consumers 2 with "additive-free" on menthol cigarettes when they 3 are clearly advertised and labeled as menthol 4 cigarettes. But the thrust of the complaint is that 5 the advertising as a whole gives rise to a misleading 6 perception of safer or healthier cigarettes. It is 7 possible to mislead with true statements, especially 8 if the inferences lead to a dubious conclusion that 9 is unsupported or lacking in rigorous review. Again, 10 that's what the Supreme Court said in Peel.

11 So taking the allegations in the complaint 12 as true, the plaintiffs plausibly allege that the 13 advertising as a whole is inherently misleading. The 14 Tenth Circuit standard that the information must be 15 "incapable of being presented in a way that is not 16 deceptive," the Revo standard is stringent. Here, 17 given the history of FTC warnings, it is plausible
18 that the defendants' representations mislead
19 consumers and cannot be presented in a nonmisleading 20 way. The defendants' entire advertising campaign 21 relies upon associations of naturalness, ties to the 22 earth, and conscious decisions to stay natural. As 23 the plaintiffs' complaint alleges, those themes are 24 often associated with better health choices. It is 25 plausible that cigarettes and those associations

1 cannot be paired together without being misleading.

2 Turning to the Central Hudson balancing
3 test, the analysis for the Central Hudson balancing 4 test has the following elements: One, whether the 5 government interests in regulation is substantial; 6 two, to whether the regulation directly advances the 7 government interest; and three, whether the 8 regulation is no more burdensome than necessary to 9 serve the interest. That's Revo and Central Hudson.
10 Courts must evaluate the precise interest offered by 11 the party in favor of the regulation. Revo indicates 12 that a regulation will not be supported if it 13 provides ineffective or remote support for the 14 proffered purpose. Revo also indicates that the 15 purported harm must be real and the regulation must 16 alleviate it to a material degree.

17 Assuming that the defendants'
18 representations are protected commercial speech, the 19 Central Hudson balancing testing applies. The 20 plaintiffs then must plausibly allege the following: 21 One, that there is a substantial interest in 22 regulating deceptive advertising practices through 23 the judiciary and state consumer protection statutes; 24 two, that the regulation directly advances the 25 proffered interest; and three, that the regulation is

1 no more burdensome than necessary to achieve that 2 interest. Construing the complaint's allegations in 3 the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, the Court 4 concludes that the plaintiffs plausibly allege 5 sufficient facts to meet each of the three prongs of 6 the Central Hudson balancing test.

7 Plaintiffs assert that the substantial
8 interest in regulation is to discourage deceptive
9 business practices. First, the plaintiffs plausibly 10 allege in the complaint that a significant number of 11 people are affected by the defendants' allegedly 12 deceptive advertising practices. The plaintiffs 13 provide legal support to their assertions by citing 14 cases to support the contention that general consumer 15 protection efforts serve a substantial public
16 interest. The plaintiffs contend that they plausibly 17 allege that the remedies they seek, but do not commit 18 to, would be an adequate fit to advance protection 19 against deceptive advertising, injunctive relief to 20 limit the deception and monetary relief to deter the 21 deception. Plaintiffs note that they do not commit 22 to any particular remedies at this time, contending 23 that the Court may shape relief that it determines is 24 proper. Because the Court can shape proper relief 25 later in the case, at the motion to dismiss stage it

1 seems premature to determine that the plaintiffs'
2 complaint fails the third prong of Central Hudson; 3 i.e., "that the regulation is no more burdensome than 4 necessary to achieve that interest." The judicial 5 regulation has not been determined yet. The 6 plaintiffs therefore plausibly allege that the 7 regulation will directly advance the government's 8 interest in discouraging deceptive business
9 practices. It is also plausible that the Court can 10 craft appropriate relief that is "no more burdensome 11 than necessary" to achieve the government interests.

12 Accordingly, even assuming the Central 13 Hudson balancing test applies, the complaint "allows 14 the court to draw the reasonable inferences that the 15 defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." The 16 complaint plausibly alleges that; one, there is a 17 substantial government interest in regulation; two, 18 the regulation directly advances the proffered 19 interest; and three, that the regulation is no more 20 burdensome than necessary to achieve that interest.

21 So the Court is still inclined to conclude 22 that even assuming the Central Hudson balancing test 23 applies, the complaint plausibly alleges sufficient 24 facts to meet the test. And so, again, the Court is 25 continuing to think it will deny the motion to 1 and the mootness.

2 Defendants' intention would be to submit on 3 the papers on two issues, Your Honor, the state 4 statutory claims, including the safe harbors, and the 5 RAI, Reynolds American, Inc., personal jurisdiction 6 motion.

7 As far as the defense is concerned, we're 8 finished with three issues. The first would be 9 preemption. Your Honor has again reiterated your 10 views on that issue, likewise with the First 11 Amendment.

12 And finally, as Your Honor noted, there was 13 supplemental briefing on the reasonable consumer 14 issue. But the defendants don't perceive a need to 15 pursue that orally before Your Honor today. That 16 said, as to any issue that the defendants propose 17 Your Honor resolve on the papers, or that we believe 18 we have already adequately addressed, we would be 19 happy to respond to any questions that Your Honor 20 might have, or to provide argument, if Your Honor 21 wishes.

22 With that, do you want me to proceed, Your 24 THE COURT: Yeah, why don't you go ahead.

1 MR. BIERSTEKER: Yes, sir.

2 To briefly recap, nine of the 12 unjust
3 enrichment claims are barred by the existence of an 4 adequate remedy at law. I generally addressed that 5 point last time. I had started down the road with 6 the state-specific law, having completed four of the 7 nine different states. I was up to New Jersey when 8 Your Honor ended the hearing last time.

9 So let me start with New Jersey. New 10 Jersey law is clear. Even the cases that were relied 11 upon by the plaintiffs recognize that the existence 12 of an adequate remedy at law bars an unjust 13 enrichment claim. Plaintiffs' only response is to 14 argue that it is premature to address this issue on a 15 motion to dismiss. That's one of their general 16 points that Your Honor may recall I touched on 17 generally last time.

18 In these nine states, the existence of an 19 adequate remedy at law bars an unjust enrichment 20 claim. There is, however, an exception. And the 21 exception is where the very existence of the adequate 22 remedy at law is in doubt, as, for example, may occur 23 when there is an action at law on a contract and 24 there is doubt about the existence of the contract or 25 whether the contract addresses the conduct at issue.

1 Here, there is no question about the very 2 existence of the adequate remedy at law. The 3 statutes do exist. They do cover the conduct that is 4 allegedly wrongful. And so I don't think the 5 exception applies.

6 As to New Jersey, plaintiffs provide no New 7 Jersey authority suggesting that an adequate 8 remedy -- the Adequate Remedy Rule should not be 9 applied at the motion to dismiss stage.

10 So let's turn to New York. The highest 11 court in New York, the court of appeals, has been 12 unequivocal on two points that I think are 13 dispositive here, in a 2008 decision cited in our 14 brief, Samiento, S-A-M-I-E-N-T-O, versus World Yacht, 15 Inc. It's in our opening brief 58 and our reply at 16 30. First, the New York Court of Appeals confirmed 17 the general rule that unjust enrichment does not lie, 18 as plaintiffs have an adequate remedy at law. And 19 second, in a firm dismissal, plaintiffs' unjust
20 enrichment claim, before any discovery because a 21 statutory claim was available, just as here.

22 North Carolina. The North Carolina Supreme 23 Court in a 1992 decision, Embry Construction Group, 24 Inc., cited in our opening brief at 59, and our reply 25 at 31, made clear that the Court's equitable

1 intervention is obviated when an adequate remedy at 2 law is available to the plaintiff. In the teeth of 3 that precedent the plaintiffs here argue otherwise, 4 based on a recitation of the elements of a prima 5 facie case for unjust enrichment. I would submit, 6 Your Honor, that the elements of an unjust enrichment
7 case presuppose the existence of the claim and teach 8 nothing about the Adequate Remedy at Law Rule.

9 Plaintiffs once again argue prematurity.
10 That argument fails for the reasons explained last 11 time, and I briefly touched upon earlier here today.
12 Plaintiffs do note that in Embry, the North Carolina
13 Supreme Court declined to dismiss the unjust
14 enrichment claim there. That's true. But the Court 15 did so specifically because the only relevant statute 16 did not supply a remedy for the alleged harm. Here, 17 North Carolina law does supply a statutory remedy.
18 And it is beside the point that plaintiffs may or may 19 not be entitled to that remedy at the end of the day.

20 Plaintiffs also note in New York, Tompkins
21 versus Key Health Medical Solutions, there, the Court 22 stated that it would be premature to foreclose the 23 plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim. But the Court 24 explained that this was because of questions as to 25 the exact nature of the transactions between the

1 parties, which seemed to preclude the court from 2 confirming that legal remedies were available for the 3 wrongdoing alleged. In no way did the court in that 4 decision suggest that it was casting doubt at all on 5 the North Carolina Supreme Court's decision in Embry.

6 Ohio. There is no disagreement that an
7 adequate remedy at law bars an unjust enrichment
8 claim in Ohio. That's been the law of Ohio since at 9 least 1944, when its Supreme Court ruled the case of 10 State, ex rel versus House, cited in our opening 11 brief at page 59.

12 Plaintiffs rely on their alternative
13 pleading theory. But the very decision they cite,
14 Paikai versus General Motors, states that alternative 15 pleading is allowed under Ohio law, quote, "only in 16 the face of uncertainty as to the existence of a 17 contract, or perhaps uncertainty as to the contract's 18 application to the dispute."

19 In another decision that plaintiffs cite,
20 Nessell (phonetic) versus Whirlpool, a Northern 21 District of Ohio case, from 2008, the court nowhere 22 addressed the Adequate Remedy Rule at all. But 23 merely said that a plaintiff could plead a contract 24 claim and an unjust enrichment claim in the 25 alternative, even though the existence of the

1 contract, if ultimately established, would bar
2 recovery under unjust enrichment.

3 Washington. The Washington Supreme Court
4 affirmed dismissal of an unjust enrichment claim 5 explaining that. And I quote, "to the extent that 6 plaintiffs have a remedy at law, they are not 7 entitled to pursue a remedy in equity." That's the 8 Seattle Professional Engineering Employees
9 Association versus Boeing case cited in our opening 10 brief at, I think, page 40. I can't read my own 11 handwriting.

12 Plaintiffs' sole response here is to argue
13 prematurity, for which they rely on U.S. ex rel 14 Kester, a Southern District of New York case from 15 2014. Kester relied on cases decided under the False 16 Claims Act, in which unjust enrichment actions are 17 governed by federal common law. As such, Kester does 18 not involve Washington state law, nor does it call 19 into question the established limitations that the 20 State of Washington has applied to its law.

21 That ends the first part of the argument,
22 the adequate remedy at law component of the unjust 23 enrichment argument. I'm happy to stop here if Your 24 Honor would like to hear from plaintiffs as to that 25 issue.

1 MS. WOLCHANSKY: It's updated. The first 2 one addressed the reasonable consumer standard, and 3 this one addresses unjust enrichment, and later 4 express warranty.

5 THE COURT: All right. Anything further on 6 that?

7 MS. WOLCHANSKY: I have nothing further on 8 adequate remedy at law.

9 THE COURT: All right. Mr. Biersteker, if 10 you want to take up the other issues.

11 MR. BIERSTEKER: Thank you, Your Honor.

12 For four of the 12 states, Michigan, New 13 Jersey, North Carolina, and Ohio, a plaintiff must 14 confer a direct benefit on the defendant to support 15 their unjust enrichment claim. In our briefs we 16 cited state and federal cases applying each of the 17 four states' laws, affirming -- or affirming the 18 dismissal of claims by plaintiffs who did not confer 19 the requisite direct benefit on the defendant. And 20 in a number of those cases, the lack of a direct 21 benefit stems from the fact that the plaintiffs in 22 the case had purchased the item in question from a 23 retailer, rather than the manufacturer who they had 24 sued.

25 For three of those four states, Michigan,

1 North Carolina, and Ohio, plaintiffs' opposition
2 relies only on unpublished federal court decisions
3 that impose a less stringent rule than the states' 4 own courts have applied.

5 In New Jersey, plaintiffs rely on a single 6 federal decision, Stewart versus Beam Global Spirits
7 & Wine -- a case that's also in their PowerPoint, I 8 noted -- that disagreed with the rule applied by, 9 quote, "the vast majority of courts in the district," 10 as the court itself acknowledged, and that other 11 courts have subsequently refused to follow, including 12 in the Fishman case decided in our reply brief at 13 page 32.

14 THE COURT: What was the date of that 15 district court case?

16 MR. BIERSTEKER: The original district
17 court case relied upon by plaintiffs is 877 F.Supp.
18 2d, 192. It's a 2012 case.

19 THE COURT: And who is the judge?

20 MR. BIERSTEKER: Gosh, Your Honor, I'll 21 have to look. I cannot recall. I'll advise Your 22 Honor on that momentarily.

23 THE COURT: All right.

24 MR. BIERSTEKER: The subsequent case that 25 we discuss in our brief, the Fishman case, was

1 decided in April of 2013, so a year later.

2 We'll have to get back to Your Honor. I
3 did not bring the case with me, so I cannot tell you 4 who the judge was. I apologize.

5 THE COURT: That's all right.

6 MR. BIERSTEKER: At the end of the day,
7 plaintiffs urge this Court really to find that 8 indirect benefits are somehow direct. And there is 9 no reason to do that contrary to the law of the four 10 states.

11 Again, unjust enrichment is a gap filler.
12 These four states have chosen to draw that doctrine 13 narrowly, likely because numerous legal remedies
14 already exist for consumers who have suffered as a 15 result of deceptive advertising. And I urge Your 16 Honor to follow the case law from the states 17 themselves.

18 I think it would make sense, Your Honor, 19 for me to address the two sort of minor points with 20 respect to New Jersey and New York before I sit down.

21 THE COURT: Okay.

22 MR. BIERSTEKER: Plaintiffs' unjust
23 enrichment claims in New Jersey and New York are also 24 foreclosed for an independent reason. In New Jersey, 25 the New Jersey Supreme Court has held that for unjust

1 enrichment a plaintiff is required to show, and I 2 quote, "that it expected remuneration from the 3 defendant at the time it performed or conferred a 4 benefit on the defendant, and that the failure of 5 remuneration enriched defendant beyond its 6 contractual rights." That's the VRG Corp. versus 7 JKN Reality Corp., cited in our reply brief at pages 8 32 and 33.

9 Here, plaintiffs make no such allegation in 10 their complaint that there was an expectation of 11 remuneration from the defendant.

12 As to New York, in New York, an unjust 13 enrichment claim will not lie where it simply 14 duplicates a conventional claim at law. And the way 15 the New York courts have construed what is 16 duplicative is where the action for unjust 17 enrichment, quote, "stems from the same underlying 18 allegation as the legal claim." The doctrine is 19 broader than an Adequate Remedy Rule, because it does 20 not require that the claim being duplicated satisfy 21 any other criteria, such as providing an adequate 22 remedy. The duplication makes it more clear that 23 plaintiffs' claim under New York law must be 24 dismissed.

25 Unless Your Honor has questions, those

2 THE COURT: All right. Thank you, Mr.
3 Biersteker.

4 MR. BIERSTEKER: Thank you.

5 THE COURT: Ms. Wolchansky, do you have 6 something on these two issues?

7 MS. WOLCHANSKY: I will respond just very 8 briefly, Your Honor, on the direct purchase. If we 9 could put that up on the screen.

10 With respect to Michigan, Your Honor,
11 defendants' contention that Michigan requires a 12 direct benefit has been rejected in the In Re: Auto
13 Parts Antitrust Litigation. The U.S. District Court
14 for the Eastern District Michigan held that "Michigan 15 law does not require a direct benefit to be conferred 16 directly by plaintiff to a defendant." And the cite 17 for that case is 29 F.Supp. 3d 982, at 1021. That's 18 a 2014 case.

19 THE COURT: Do you know who the judge is on 20 that case?

21 MS. WOLCHANSKY: I don't, Your Honor. I'm 22 sure somebody can look it up. I don't. It's Eastern 23 District of Michigan 2014.

24 It's also significant to note that the In 25 Re: Auto Parts court distinguished the lone case that

1 the defendants cite in their brief, A&M Supply
2 Company versus Microsoft, which is 2008 Westlaw
3 540833. Specifically in In Re: Auto Parts, the court
4 noted that in A&M Supply, the state appellate court 5 dismissed the case for failure to prosecute. And, 6 therefore, its discussion of the merits of the 7 indirect purchaser plaintiffs' claims for unjust 8 enrichment, under Michigan law, based upon lack of 9 direct contact with the defendant and lack of direct 10 payment is in dicta. And that's at 1021.

11 With respect to New Jersey, there is a 12 decision, Stewart versus Beam Global Spirits, finding 13 sufficiently direct relationship for an unjust 14 enrichment claim where there are false claims or 15 misrepresentations directed for the purpose of 16 generating retail sales, and where those retail sales 17 could have the effect of increasing the amount of 18 wholesale sales to the manufacturer.

19 And did we find the judge --

20 MR. REESE: That's Judge Noel Hillman,
21 H-I-L-L-M-A-N.

22 THE COURT: Thank you.

23 MS. WOLCHANSKY: It would be inequitable
24 under New Jersey law to allow the defendants to 25 insulate themselves from liability by simply

1 asserting that retail sales cut off any relationship 2 between the consumer and the manufacturer. And,
3 Judge, the Miller case is Judge George Steeh, 4 S-T-E-E-H.

5 With respect to North Carolina, we would 6 submit the relevant case is Metric Constructors case.
7 Under North Carolina law it is sufficient for a 8 plaintiff to prove that it has conferred some benefit 9 on the defendant without regard to the directness of 10 the transaction. That's a Fourth Circuit case that 11 we believe is controlling here.

12 And finally --

13 THE COURT: Do you know who the panel is on 14 that Fourth Circuit case?

15 MS. WOLCHANSKY: I don't.

16 THE COURT: That's unpublished.

17 MS. WOLCHANSKY: I don't know who it is.

21 case is, we would submit, the Paikai case, which is

24 That's all I have on the direct purchase,

6 THE COURT: All right. Did you want to go
7 to the express warranty issue, or is that the one you 8 wanted to submit?

9 MR. BIERSTEKER: Yes, Your Honor. The 10 special warranty would be next on the agenda.

11 THE COURT: All right. Okay.

12 MR. BIERSTEKER: Go ahead.

13 MS. WOLCHANSKY: The panel, Your Honor, in 14 the Fourth -- I think it was the Fourth Circuit -- is 19 Express warranty. Plaintiffs' express

20 warranty claims are defeated in some of the states 21 because of the failure to give pre-suit notice or 22 lack of privity. The pre-suit notice issue arises in 23 six of the states: California, Florida, Illinois, 24 New Mexico, New York, and North Carolina. It's 25 indisputable that plaintiffs neither gave the

1 requisite pre-suit notice, nor specifically allege 2 that they have done so.

3 Plaintiffs' complaint, to be sure,
4 generally alleges, at paragraph 456, that plaintiffs 5 performed, quote, "all conditions precedent to 6 defendants' liability," close quote. But to the 7 extent that that global ambiguous allegation was met 8 to subsume the providing of the requisite pre-suit 9 notification in these states is indisputably false.
10 Plaintiffs never gave such pre-suit notice of their 11 claim for alleged breach of express warranty. And 12 they neither assert nor specifically allege 13 otherwise. In any event, I submit that their global 14 allegation is legally insufficient.

15 One of plaintiffs' principal cases, the 16 Rust-Oleum case, for example, teaches -- and I quote, 17 "to sustain a breach of warranty claim, the law still 18 mandates that a complaint provide factual allegations 19 sufficient to establish pre-suit notice." Neither 20 plaintiffs' global pleading, which does not even 21 mention notice, nor their actual failure to provide 22 the pre-suit notice fulfills a recognized principal 23 purpose of the pre-suit notice requirement.
24 Especially in cases like this one that are not for 25 personal injury damages; namely, defendants were

1 deprived of the opportunities to prior to suit to 2 cure the alleged breach, to minimize their exposure, 3 or to prepare for litigation. Nor is it somehow 4 premature, as plaintiffs claim, for this Court to 5 decide now whether the lone global ambiguous
6 allegation in paragraph 456 of the complaint legally 7 fulfills their pre-suit notice requirement, 8 especially when there has been no allegation and can 9 be no allegation that, in fact, the pre-suit notice 10 was provided.

11 Unlike Rust-Oleum, again one of the cases 12 upon which plaintiffs principally rely, deciding that 13 legal issue here on a motion to dismiss is 14 appropriate. It would not be unreasonably 15 burdensome. In Rust-Oleum, the issue arose under the 16 UCC, where you have to give a reasonable notice, and 17 promptly after discovering the facts relating to it.
18 Some of the plaintiffs had done, some of them had 19 not, and so it was a complicated issue that the court 20 deferred until later. That's not the situation here.

21 Plaintiffs do not otherwise contest that 22 the failure to give pre-suit notice defeats their 23 claims under Florida and New Mexico law. They do, 24 however, make three scattershot arguments about four 25 remaining states. In Illinois, plaintiffs assert

1 that the defendant's alleged actual knowledge of the 2 misconduct suffices. But it does not, as the 3 Illinois Supreme Court held in the Connick case cited 4 in our brief on page 35 -- our reply brief on page 5 35, and our opening brief at 66. In Connick, the 6 Illinois Supreme Court said it is not enough that a 7 manufacturer is aware of problems with a particular 8 product, which frankly a manufacturer likely knows 9 better than consumers anyway, but instead, the 10 defendants must be made aware of the buyer's claim.

11 Plaintiffs next maintain that in three of 12 the states, Illinois, North Carolina, and New York, 13 the filing of the complaint itself somehow 14 constitutes pre-suit notice. It does not, except in 15 personal injury cases, as those courts in those three 16 states have all recognized, with the authority cited 17 on pages 35 to 36 in our reply, and in particular in 18 Note 24. For example, as the North Carolina Supreme 19 Court reasoned in a 1981 decision, in a suit for 20 personal injuries notice provides no opportunity to 21 cure the alleged breach, because the injury has 22 already occurred. And accordingly, compliance with 23 the notice requirement is excused.

24 In California, plaintiffs argue that the 25 pre-suit notice requirement does not apply to suits

1 brought by an indirect purchaser. And they cite a
2 case, Zapata Fonseca versus Goya Foods, Inc., a 3 Northern District of California case, from 2016, that 4 had relied upon a 1963 decision from the California
5 Supreme Court for an exception. But as a district
6 court explained in an MDL proceeding, in which a 7 similar argument was raised, that 1963 decision
8 limits the exception to the pre-suit notice 9 requirement to strict products liability cases in 10 tort. That's the Metro Corp. case out of the Middle 11 District of Georgia, in 2015, in our brief.

12 Here, plaintiffs are proceeding on a 13 contract theory, not strict liability in torts. It's 14 not a personal injury case. And, therefore, the 15 Court here, in applying California law, should do as 16 the court in Mentor did, which is to hold that the 17 failure to provide the requisite pre-suit notice is 18 not excused.

19 There is one additional issue with respect
20 to the warranty claims, Your Honor, that I think it 21 might make sense for me to address, since I can do it 22 in fairly short order. But it deals with privity and 23 it deals with three states. If you would rather hear 24 the response from --

1 MR. BIERSTEKER: Fine.

2 In three of the states, Florida, Illinois,
3 and New York, plaintiffs' express warranty claims are 4 barred because of the lack of privity. Plaintiffs do 5 not allege that they are in privity with any 6 defendant. Nor do plaintiffs dispute that privity is 7 generally required under the three states' law for 8 express warranty claims. So the issue before Your 9 Honor is whether this case falls within an exception
10 to the general rule requiring privity for express 11 warranty claims in those three states. The 12 plaintiffs' claim that all three states recognize an 13 exception for misrepresentations on product packaging 14 or labels. And while the three cases cited by 15 plaintiffs do say that, the courts in all three 16 states routinely dismiss express warranty claims 17 based on product packaging and labels, in cases that 18 involve economic loss. Courts applying all three 19 states' law have also specifically considered 20 requests for an exception to the privity requirement, 21 but declined to do so after reviewing the relevant 22 state law.

23 In Keith versus Ferring Pharmaceuticals,
24 Inc. -- that's a Northern District of Illinois case 25 from 2016, in our reply brief at 36 to 37 -- the

1 Court considered an argument just like the one 2 plaintiff is advancing here, but concluded, after 3 reviewing Illinois law, that the Illinois Supreme 4 Court -- and I'm quoting, "The Supreme Court in 5 Illinois has yet to extend express warranties to 6 nonpriority plaintiffs." This Court should not go 7 further than the Illinois Supreme Court in creating 8 an exception to that state's privity requirement.

9 In Hill versus Hoover -- this is a Florida 10 case -- the court reviewed the cases supposedly 11 supporting the exception that plaintiffs invoke here, 12 and found them unpersuasive as a matter of Florida 13 law. That was a Northern District of Florida case in 14 2012.

15 Finally, Ebin is a case in New York, 16 E-B-I-N, from 2013. And there, the court found that 17 the argument for a privity exception relied on cases 18 that predated key changes to New York law. They all 19 arose prior to the time New York adopted the UCC, 20 which imposed the notice requirement. And prior to 21 that New York common law did not require it. I 22 submit that the cases relied upon by the defendants 23 with respect to this issue are more reasoned 24 applications of the relevant states' laws, and the 25 Court should follow their lead in rejecting the 12 MS. WOLCHANSKY: I'd first like to 13 highlight -- I'll go briefly through a lot of this, 14 since most of it is addressed very directly in the 15 briefing, and I won't regurgitate that here.

16 I will point out that several of the 17 defendants' cases actually support plaintiffs'
18 arguments. In the In Re: Clorox Consumer Litigation 19 case 894 F.Supp. 2d, 1224, which is a Northern 20 District of California case, the court found that 21 there was a breach of warranty claim, and an 22 exception to the privity requirement when the 23 plaintiff relies on written labels or ads of the 24 manufacturer. That's case that the defendants cited.
25 I believe it might have been in the unjust

1 enrichment, but it actually supports our contention
2 here that a breach of warranty can stand. Likewise, 3 the Williams versus Beechnut Nutrition Corp. 229 Cal.
4 Reporter 605, an express warranty claim survived 5 because defendants utilized advertising media to urge 6 use and application of product, and warranted it was 7 effective, proper, and safe for intended use.

8 On the pre-litigation notice topic, there
9 is so much knowledge of the breach here. I mean, 10 Your Honor heard extensive argument the last time we 11 were before you on the consumer issues, but it's 12 plentiful. It's in the complaint. The FDA, the FTC, 13 there have been warning letters on these very issues.
14 So to suggest, just kind of in the abstract, what is 15 the purpose of this actual knowledge requirement
16 under the UCC to make sure that the defendant can go 17 ahead and cure the conduct, well, there is no
18 question that they've had knowledge of these claims.
19 The FDA has made them quite aware in the warning 20 letter, and they've been in negotiation to cure the 21 very misleading representations that are at issue in 22 this case. So, as a preliminary matter, to suggest 23 there is no knowledge seems a little bit absurd in 24 our opinion.

1 the Rust-Oleum case, which is Judge St. Eve, 155
2 F.Supp. 3d 772, cited in our brief. And also the 3 Caterpillar case, which is 2015 Westlaw 4591236; the 4 Hydroxycut case, 801 F.Supp. 2d 993. All of these 5 cases are on point. It is not required to have 6 notice, and also premature, at the pleading stage, 7 without more evidence to make a determination as to 8 whether there was knowledge.

9 Again, as Mr. Biersteker pointed out, there 10 are in fact exceptions to this notice requirement, 11 which we, of course, would state have -- have 12 happened here. Here, we have New York. I talked 13 about the Hydroxycut case.

14 In California, it doesn't apply when a 15 breach of warranty -- breach of express warranty 16 claim, if they haven't dealt with that manufacturer.
17 That's Fonseca versus Goya Foods case. North
18 Carolina is the Maybank case. If there is a filing 19 of a complaint, that can be notice. In Illinois, no 20 notice is required where the seller's direct 21 knowledge of the defect is alleged. And again, we've 22 alleged that here.

23 So we would direct the Court to these 24 cases, which we believe establish we don't need 25 actual knowledge. Although we assert that there is 1 unquestionably knowledge here.

2 Briefly, on the privity issue, the Florida
3 federal courts have recently denied motions to 4 dismiss claims for breach of express warranty in 5 cases with facts very similar to ours. And most of 6 these cases postdate the single case that defendants
7 have cited in their brief, which Mr. Biersteker again
8 here today relied upon, which is the Hill versus 9 Hoover case, 899 F.Supp. 2d 1259. Smith versus WM
10 Wrigley, Jr. Company, 663 F.Supp. 2d 1336 is on 11 point. That case, the plaintiff filed a class action 12 against Wrigley, taking issue with its claim that 13 Eclipse gum is scientifically proven to help kill 14 germs, as a result of a natural ingredient. Various 15 causes of action in that case, including breach of 16 express warranty. Wrigley filed a motion to dismiss 17 arguing, as the defendants do here, that express 18 warranty is not viable absent privity, and concluding 19 that because Smith didn't directly buy from Wrigley, 20 he could not establish the existence of that element.
21 The court denied the motion, noting first that while 22 Florida law is clear requiring privity to recover for 23 the breach of an implied warranty, not an express 24 warranty, the Florida Supreme Court has not provided 25 similar clarification for express warranty claims.

1 So distinguished an implied warranty from an express.
2 And while the court declined to resolve the issue of 3 whether privity is ever required for express warranty 4 claims, it did find in that case, given the 5 particular facts, the analysis is straightforward.
6 And importantly, one, it defies common sense to argue 7 that purchasers of the gum presumed that the cashier 8 at the local convenience store is familiar with the 9 scientific properties of the MBE, which is the 10 ingredient there. Two, it is significant that the 11 express warranty the manufacturer allegedly breached 12 is contained on the package, as it is here in this 13 case. And three, the complaint alleged there that 14 plaintiff relied on the warranty when purchasing the 15 gum. So, in that case, the court concluded that the 16 plaintiffs stated express warranty despite the lack 17 of privity.

18 We would also point Your Honor to the Kahru 19 case, K-A-H-R-U, which is a Southern District of 20 Florida decision, 2013 U.S. District Lexis 112613, 21 explaining that express warranties were contained on 22 the package and in the advertisements, both clearly 23 directed to the end purchaser, and holding that 24 privity was not required for a breach of express 25 warranty case.

1 The Garcia versus Kashi case, 43 F.Supp. 3d
2 1359, a Southern District of Florida case from 2014; 3 again an express warranty claim survived despite the 4 lack of privity.

5 And finally, again in a more recent case
6 than the Hill versus Hoover case that the defendants 7 are relying upon, is the Bohlke, B-O-H-L-K-E, versus 8 Shearer's Foods, S-H-E-A-R-E-R'S, Foods, 2015 U.S.
9 District Lexis 6054.

10 In Illinois there are several cases on 11 point. Again, on this lack of privity issue we would 12 direct the Court to the Mednick versus Precore case, 13 2014 U.S. District Lexis 159687, conferring that a 14 manufacturer's documents given directly to the buyer 15 prior to the purchase may give rise to an express 16 warranty because they become the basis of the 17 bargain.

18 There is an exception if the manufacturer
19 expressly warrants its goods to the ultimate 20 consumer. The Baldwin versus Star Scientific, Inc., 21 78 F.Supp. 3d 724. This case was actually cited by 22 the defendants.

23 Again, in that Mednick case, the Court
24 found that brochures, documents, and advertisements
25 may constitute a sufficient basis for an express

1 warranty.

2 The cases cited here, Your Honor, all 3 provide for express warranty despite a lack of 4 privity, which is what we believe should be the 5 determination in this court as well.

6 Finally, in New York, there is recent 7 authority supporting the notion that the New York
8 Court of Appeals has dispensed -- which is of course 9 the highest court in New York, which is always very 10 confusing if you don't practice there -- has 11 dispensed with the requirement of privity in cases 12 involving breach express warranty where only economic 13 damages are alleged. That's the Mahoney versus 14 Endohealth Solutions case, 2016 U.S. District Lexis
15 94732. And there, importantly, the court concluded 16 that privity is not required, and allowed express 17 warranty claims to proceed. What's important about 18 this case, Judge, is the Mahoney case postdates the 19 Ebin case, which is the case that the defendants rely 20 upon. More recent authority does not require privity 21 between a consumer and a manufacturer, where the 22 plaintiff alleges breach of warranty and seeks 23 economic damages.

24 That is all I have, Your Honor, on express
25 warranty.

3 MS. WOLCHANSKY: Thank you.

4 THE COURT: Mr. Biersteker, anything

6 MR. BIERSTEKER: Just very briefly, Judge.

7 First, there is no dispute that the 8 pre-suit notice was not given.

9 Second, as to the exception that plaintiffs 10 would perceive, I think it's narrower than that which 11 they argue for. Again, I'm not saying that there 12 aren't cases that use language that either side could 13 seize upon to support their position. But I think, 14 if you look at the reasoning in those cases, the 15 cases relied upon by the defendants are superior.

16 I must say, the Mahoney case in New York is 17 not one that was cited, I don't think, in anybody's 18 brief. It's not one that I've read, and I'm 19 unfortunately not in a position to specifically

2 THE COURT: You wanted to do the injunctive 3 relief, okay.

4 MR. BIERSTEKER: As Your Honor may recall
5 from our last outing in June, as to the menthol 6 theory, Your Honor specifically asked why didn't 7 Santa Fe drop the additive-free tobacco claim, at 8 least with respect to its menthol cigarettes. And 9 while the Santa Fe Natural Tobacco Company has 10 executed a memorandum of agreement with the FDA, 11 under which it will do precisely that before the end 12 of this year, in fact it will do more. Pursuant to 13 the memorandum of understanding, Santa Fe Natural 14 Tobacco Company -- which I'll shorthand as "Santa 15 Fe" -- will cease using the terms "additive-free" and 16 "natural" to describe the tobacco in the Natural 17 American Spirit cigarettes, in both ads and on the 18 packs.

19 And pursuant to the FTC's subsequent letter 20 guidance, Santa Fe Natural Tobacco Company will 21 modify the disclaimer. Let me explain. Since Santa 22 Fe will no longer be claiming that the tobacco in 23 Natural American Spirit cigarettes is additive-free, 24 the current disclaimer, "No additives in our tobacco 25 does not mean a safer cigarette," will be

1 generalized. And the generalized disclaimer will 2 say, "Natural American cigarettes are not safer than 3 any other cigarettes." That moots plaintiffs' 4 request to enjoin Santa Fe from continuing to use the 5 phrases "additive-free" and "natural" to describe the 6 tobacco in Natural American Spirit cigarettes.

7 I would point out that Santa Fe will 8 continue to be permitted to use the word "natural" in 9 the brand name. The brand will still be Natural 10 American Spirit. I would note that the complaint, 11 which is the operative document here on a motion to 12 dismiss, seeks to enjoin Santa Fe's false and 13 deceptive practices. But it discusses and focuses on 14 the use of "additive-free" and "natural" to describe 15 the tobacco in Natural American Spirit cigarettes.
16 There is no allegation in the complaint that 17 "natural," specifically as used in the brand name or 18 the trademark is false or misleading, and no requests
19 specifically to enjoin Santa Fe to change the brand 20 name to omit the word "natural" in it. To the extent 21 that plaintiffs do seek to enjoin the use of the word 22 "natural" in the brand name or the trademark, 23 defendants do not assert that it is moot at this 24 point.

25 Defendants do believe, however, that in the 1 event there is such a claim, although, again, it is 2 not apparent on the face of the complaint, it should 3 be dismissed for other reasons, including plaintiffs' 4 inability to allege plausibly that "natural" in the 5 brand name alone misleads consumers.

6 Indeed, as to the menthol theory, Your 7 Honor indicated on June 9 anyway, that you were 8 focused more on "additive-free, the descriptor 9 "additive-free," as applied to the tobacco, as 10 opposed to "natural." And, in any event, I would 11 submit it is implausible that consumers would be led 12 by the brand name alone, Natural American Spirits, 13 that cigarettes that are labeled as menthol, that are 14 bought because they are menthol, that they somehow 15 will be led to believe that they do not contain 16 menthol.

17 I might also add that in his exposition on 18 the question "what is menthol" at the June 9 hearing, 19 Mr. Schlesinger noted that menthol can be either 20 synthetic or natural. The menthol in the Natural 21 American Spirit cigarettes is natural. In fact, it's 22 organic.

23 So with that, I don't have anything 24 further, unless Your Honor has questions regarding 25 the injunction issue.

2 Ms. Wolchansky. And then I may have some questions.
3 Thank you, Mr. Biersteker.

4 Ms. Wolchansky.

5 MS. WOLCHANSKY: Judge, I'll start, just 6 briefly, with the suggestion that our complaint, 7 which is the operative complaint before Your Honor, 8 somehow doesn't touch on the brand name as using 9 "natural" as part of the deception here. I mean, I 10 only just read the first two pages of the complaint, 11 but I am happy to share just a couple of the 12 paragraphs that make it quite clear that the use of 13 "natural," be it in the brand name, or otherwise, is 14 absolutely at the heart of this case. The very first 15 paragraph under "nature of the case," paragraph 1 16 states, "This action seeks to redress defendants' 17 Santa Fe Natural Tobacco Company, Inc., Reynolds, 18 RJR, deceptive marketing of their, quote, 'Natural 19 American Spirit' brand cigarettes as 'natural' and 20 'additive-free.'"

21 Paragraph 4, "By uniformly using the terms, 22 quote, 'natural' and 'additive-free' on each and 23 every label, defendants intentionally and 24 successfully convey to reasonable consumers that 25 Natural American Spirit cigarettes are safer and

1 healthier to smoke than other competing cigarettes."

2 "They use the terms natural and 3 additive-free through a pervasive nationwide 4 marketing and advertising campaign." That was 5 paragraph 5.

6 I think, Judge, it's in every second or 7 third paragraph in the entire complaint. So to 8 suggest that this case isn't about the brand name or 9 the use of "natural," wherever it may occur on the 10 packaging, is just not true. So the brand name alone 11 absolutely can mislead and confuse consumers. That's 12 the entire case. And as Your Honor has stated 13 earlier today, the complaint more than plausibly 14 alleges that reasonable consumers could be misled by 15 the use of those terms.

16 Regarding the agreement to change the 17 labeling and the disclaimer, a couple of very 18 important points that absolutely do not moot these 19 claims; moot the use of it in the brand, or 20 otherwise. One, the memorandum of agreement between 21 the defendants and the FDA is not a final document.
22 This is an agreement that they have. Even the 23 defendants in their briefing, and I believe at the 24 last argument stated that is not final. They have, 25 as they've represented to the Court, agreed to make

1 some changes to their labeling. But this is not a 2 final document.

3 Importantly, there was a lawsuit filed on 4 June 6, against the FDA, regarding Santa Fe's 5 continued use of the word "natural," alleging that 6 the authorization, without following congressionally
7 mandated process for public input and FDA approval, 8 constitutes agency action that is arbitrary,
9 capricious, and an abuse of discretion, and otherwise
10 not in accordance with the Administrative Procedure 11 Act, 5 USC 7062. So that litigation is ongoing.
12 There is discussion about whether it may or may not 13 be transferred to this Court. So there is --

14 THE COURT: But that's litigation that the 15 defendants filed against the FDA?

16 MS. WOLCHANSKY: It's not. It's litigation
17 that was filed actually by Mr. Schlesinger against 18 the FDA for the continued use of "natural" without 19 the FDA going through the correct procedures to seek 20 comment.

21 THE COURT: So it's a suit to say that this 22 memoranda process is defective because it's not an 23 APA procedure?

24 MS. WOLCHANSKY: They failed to go through 25 the correct procedure in coming up with this

1 memorandum of agreement, which includes certain 2 things like seeking comment and input.

3 So there is by no means finality with 4 respect to the FDA's memorandum of agreement. And 5 that is in defendants' own briefing. To suggest that 6 that memorandum now somehow moots these claims in 7 this case, it's just not true. And, in fact, I 8 understand there may never be a final order. The 9 agreement between the defendants and the FDA might be 10 all there is. They might go ahead and make some 11 changes to the label, which, by the way, they could 12 change back anytime. So it's not moot here.

13 Oh, and they admitted that the changes are 14 not complete on page 37 of their reply brief.

15 THE COURT: When you say "not complete," 16 what does that mean? Does that mean that the 17 negotiations are not complete? Is that what you mean 18 by that, or --

19 MS. WOLCHANSKY: Although Santa Fe has not 20 yet finalized the changes to the label, they are well 21 underway. But nothing is final. So we're taking 22 representations from defense counsel that they are 23 planning to make these changes; that, you know, there 24 is a memorandum of agreement that's not final. But 25 nothing is in a position here for the Court to find

1 that those claims are moot.

2 The injunctive relief is incredibly
3 important in this case, Your Honor. This is a public 4 health claim that we allege is causing mass
5 deception. And to, at this stage in the litigation, 6 dismiss those claims because of changes that are 7 supposedly going to happen based on an agreement with 8 the FDA that isn't final, is simply premature.

9 And again, as Your Honor noted, the FTC
10 consent orders on tobacco do not preempt consumer 11 fraud claims. The same here. So, even if the FDA 12 agreement were final, there is still a right of 13 action in this case for injunctive relief.

14 That's all I have, Your Honor, on 15 injunctive relief.

16 THE COURT: All right. Thank you, Ms.
17 Wolchansky.

18 Mr. Biersteker.

19 MR. BIERSTEKER: I think I can be pretty 20 brief, Judge.

21 Let's talk about the case challenging the 22 memorandum of agreement. And let me just point out 23 that the agreement itself is final; its 24 implementation is ongoing. It allows for a
25 seven-month window from the time that the FTC weighed

1 in on the appropriate disclaimer to use. In light of 2 the fact that the specific claim "additive-free" 3 would no longer be used, it didn't make much sense to 4 have a disclaimer that was specific to additive-free
5 in the tobacco. So when that occurred, which it did, 6 there is a seven-month window with the company to 7 revise its advertising, revise its packaging, to 8 submit that to the FDA for its approval, and then to 9 implement it, which takes some time. It can't be 10 turned around overnight. It's a rather involved 11 process, more than one might think.

12 So it is wrong to say that the memorandum
13 of agreement is not final. And, indeed, the action 14 to which plaintiffs refer was brought by one of the 15 named class representatives here, Sproul. It was 16 filed on June 6 in the Southern District of Florida.
17 The newly filed complaint is against the FDA. It 18 seems a declaration that the memorandum of agreement 19 is unlawful under the APA, the Administrative 20 Procedure Act, and to set it aside and to enjoin the 21 FDA from entering into or reissuing the memorandum of 22 agreement in any form.

23 Apart from the apparent inconsistency in 24 Mr. Sproul's position --

2 Vacate the memorandum?

3 MR. BIERSTEKER: I guess it would vacate 4 the memorandum. I'm not sure it would vacate the 5 planned activity, number one. I mean, you have to 6 step back a moment. The whole issue with the FDA was 7 really largely a housekeeping issue. And I don't 8 mean that in any pejorative sense. But let me
9 explain. The FDA obtained jurisdiction over tobacco 10 in 2008, I want to say, was when the statute was 11 passed, giving the FDA regulatory authority over 12 tobacco. As part of that, if you're going to be 13 making anything that might be construed as a reduced 14 risk claim, you have to obtain the prior approval of 15 the FDA before you can market it.

16 With respect to Natural American Spirit
17 cigarettes, and the use of the descriptors "natural" 18 and "additive-free" to describe the tobacco being 19 used in those cigarettes, they were already on the 20 market. And so, when the statute was passed, there 21 was a situation where they were already on the 22 market, and so preapproval could not be sought. And 23 the warning letter really was a way of bringing the 24 issue to a head and resolving the need to obtain FDA 25 approval for a reduced risk claim, if you will, of

1 additive-free tobacco or natural tobacco. And that's 2 what prompted the warning letter, and that's what 3 prompted the resolution in the memorandum of 4 understanding -- or memorandum of agreement, excuse 5 me.

6 And so, I think that if you view it in that 7 context, even if the memorandum of agreement itself 8 were somehow superseded, there would still need to be 9 something that occurred. And there is no reason to 10 believe, at this juncture, that the FDA would do 11 anything differently than it's already done.

12 And I would point out, the reason I started 13 to discuss the Sproul case, was plaintiffs' argument 14 that somehow or another the memorandum of agreement 15 is not final, the Sproul complaint itself says that 16 the memorandum of agreement constitutes final agency 17 action under 5 USC Section 704, dispelling any 18 suggestion, I think, that the parties to the 19 memorandum of agreement will somehow abandon it or 20 not abide by it.

21 And that leads me, I guess, to my last 22 point on this issue, which is that there was some 23 suggestion that Reynolds could change -- not 24 Reynolds -- Santa Fe could change the packaging and 25 the advertising at any point. And, again, the

1 advertising is being submitted for FDA approval. I
2 think the FDA may already have the proposed 3 advertising. The packaging is coming over later.
4 Maybe I've got it switched. But they've got one or 5 the other under review.

6 And in any event, the notion that Santa Fe 7 will not adhere to the memorandum of agreement that 8 it signed with the FDA and risk alienating the FDA 9 and the FTC, both of whom have significant regulatory 10 authority over the company's business, makes no sense 11 to me. It's just not realistic to assume that Santa 12 Fe, having negotiated and having agreed to certain 13 requirements with both the FTC and the FDA is going 14 to somehow walk away from them or change its conduct.

15 Does Your Honor have any questions?

16 THE COURT: I don't believe so. Thank you,
17 Mr. Biersteker.

18 MR. BIERSTEKER: Thank you.

19 THE COURT: All right. Where do you want

21 MR. BIERSTEKER: I think we're finished, 22 Judge, as far as defense is concerned, unless Your 23 Honor has any questions about the supplemental 24 briefing, the 12(b)(6) issue, the other issues that 25 we've agreed to submit on the papers.

1 THE COURT: I don't believe so.

2 The plaintiffs certainly hit hard the 3 Court's tentative conclusions about two of the 4 statements, whether I had the ability, given what 5 they had alleged, to, as a matter of law, say that 6 the terms "natural" and then, also -- I guess the 7 word "natural," that I guess I had problems with the 8 first alleged misrepresentation and the third 9 misrepresentation.

10 They seemed to say that if they have enough 11 studies, they can -- that's enough to get them past 12 the motion to dismiss. If they found that many 13 people that are confused through studies with the 14 word "natural," that I would be in error to find that 15 I don't think a reasonable consumer would be misled 16 by that phrase.

17 Is there anything further you want to say
18 on that, Mr. Schultz?

19 MR. SCHULTZ: Your Honor, we think we 20 refuted the idea that they can outsource their 21 requirement. But if the Court wants me to go into 22 further about the Court's ability, and in fact, duty 23 on a 12(b)(6) motion to make this determination as a 24 matter of law at this stage, I'll be glad to.

25 THE COURT: Well, talk to me, what you

1 really mean by outsourcing. If they've got studies, 2 that's called evidence. Why isn't that -- I mean, if 3 they've got one judge in New Mexico looking at the 4 word "natural," going, I don't see how anybody can be 5 confused by that," but they've got 500 consumers that 6 are saying that they are confused by it, is that not 7 some evidence that the Court shouldn't rule as matter 8 of law?

9 MR. SCHULTZ: Well, your Honor, first of 10 all, I think -- let's distinguish two things. The 11 issue here is the plausibility of their allegations.
12 It's not quality of the evidence.

13 And in our footnote, Your Honor, in going 14 through some of these studies that the plaintiffs 15 relied on, I think the footnotes in our supplemental 16 briefing were very clear to show why those studies, 17 number one, don't say what was alleged. And number 18 two, the questions that were being asked in those 19 studies weren't even the pertinent ones.

20 But, again, Your Honor, that's not the 21 issue. Just to go back one step, when we were at the 22 last hearing, Your Honor, you asked the question, 23 don't you have the ability to determine as a matter 24 of law whether a reasonable consumer could be 25 confused. You asked that question directly to me.

1 And I said I believe you do. And your response was:
2 I think that's right. It was the plaintiffs, then,
3 that wanted to have supplemental briefing on this 4 issue as to whether the Court, in fact, had that 5 power, at a 12(b)(6) issue. And they provided no 6 additional information and no legal authority that 7 should dissuade the Court from that.

8 I mean, as an initial matter, Your Honor, 9 throughout the briefing, in both our initial motion, 10 in our reply brief, and at the supplemental brief -- 11 and I can give you the precise pages and footnotes, 12 if the Court wants to be directed -- we provided the 13 Court with numerous examples where federal courts do 14 precisely that; that, in ruling on a 12(b)(6) issue 15 in a consumer deception claim, courts rule as a 16 matter of law whether, in fact, the alleged 17 misrepresentation would deceive the reasonable 18 consumer.

19 The only case that the plaintiffs really 20 came back with was the Williams versus Gerber 21 Products case, a 2008 case from the Ninth Circuit.
22 And, Your Honor, the case is very short. It's very 23 clear what the Ninth Circuit did there. The Ninth 24 Circuit reversed the district court holding with 25 regard to whether the alleged misrepresentation would

1 deceive the reasonable consumer. That much is true.
2 The Ninth Circuit reversed the district court's 3 finding. But the Ninth Circuit did not reverse the 4 district court, because it held the district court 5 improperly, on a motion to dismiss, ruled on this 6 question.

7 In fact, Your Honor, in the second to the 8 last page of the opinion, the Ninth Circuit flatly 9 says: We just disagree. So it wasn't as a matter of 10 law that they disagreed on whether the district court 11 has the power to do so. They just came to a 12 different conclusion.

13 And in our supplemental brief, Your Honor, 14 we provided the Court with numerous cases within the 15 Ninth Circuit, both at the circuit court level and 16 the district court level that, since 2008, since the 17 Williams case, where the courts have continued to 18 grant motions to dismiss on reasonable consumer 19 claims, and the Ninth Circuit has repeatedly affirmed 20 those rulings.

21 And, specifically, Your Honor, if you look
22 at our supplemental brief in Footnote --

23 THE COURT: I don't want to rush you, but 24 I've got to give Ms. Bean a break.

6 THE COURT: All right. Mr. Schultz, if you

8 misrepresentations.

9 MR. SCHULTZ: Well, Your Honor, I won't 10 belabor the point that we made in our supplemental 11 briefing in response to -- the whole reason why the 12 plaintiffs asked to have supplemental briefing was 13 challenging this Court's authority to make that 14 determination. It's clear that the Court does have 15 this authority. We provided the Court with any 16 number of examples from district courts and appellate 17 courts from around the country that all have found -- 18 to use the words you used right before the break, 19 Your Honor, that one judge has the ability to look at 20 the allegations and make a determination as to what a 21 reasonable consumer would find to be misleading.

22 The other issue, Your Honor, that we raised 23 with the Court that I'm sure I don't have to remind 24 you about, was your ruling in the SEC versus 25 Goldstone case. You raised that at the last hearing

1 about: Why is this any different than what you do in 2 a securities case? Plaintiffs said, Well, it's 3 different, Your Honor, because there is a higher 4 pleading level, it's a Rule 9 fraud level. Well, the 5 SEC versus Goldstone case, that you decided in 2013, 6 that was not based on a fraud level of pleading.
7 That was based on Rule 8. And in your opinion, Your 8 Honor, your 300-some-odd page opinion, you found no 9 problem in dismissing four of the SEC's claims based 10 on what a reasonable investor or a reasonable 11 consumer, a reasonable person, would find to be 12 misleading.

13 That's precisely what the Court has the 14 ability to do here. Your Honor, you have the 15 authority. And simply because there is a study that 16 is cited, or even if there were multiple studies, the 17 fact of the matter is, Your Honor, if that's all it 18 took for a plaintiff to do, to avoid a motion to 19 dismiss, then no court would ever be able to grant a 20 motion to dismiss on a reasonable consumer deception 21 claim. But we know that that's not what courts have 22 done. We know that courts are willing to look 23 directly to the alleged misrepresentation. They look 24 directly to the product. They look directly to the 25 label. And they make that determination.

1 And as we pointed out in our supplemental 2 brief, Your Honor, on page 7, in Footnote 5, one of 3 the problems with the studies that they're citing, 4 these are studies that do not even look to or ask the 5 question about what consumers think about the 6 disclaimer that's at issue here.

7 So simply for a plaintiff to be able to 8 say, Oh, we have a study, does not preclude this 9 Court from exercising its ability under Rule 12 10 (b)(6) to look directly to the alleged 11 misrepresentation, not a study about that 12 misrepresentation, but to look directly to the 13 product itself and make a determination, as you did 14 at the hearing in June, as to what a reasonable 15 consumer would find to be misleading.

16 THE COURT: All right. Thank you,

18 Ms. Wolchansky, do you want to respond?

19 MS. WOLCHANSKY: Yes, Your Honor. Ms.
20 McGinn and I will actually both be responding on this

22 Judge, Mr. Schultz is grossly 23 mischaracterizing our position with respect to the 24 Court's ability to assess the claims at the motion to 25 dismiss phase. We explicitly acknowledge, on page 4

1 of our brief, that the Court has inherent authority
2 to assess the legal sufficiency of the claims. We do 3 argue that -- and this is an important nuance -- it's 4 not that the Court can't, as a matter of law, make a 5 determination. What the Court can't do at this stage 6 is weigh the evidence.

7 And, as the Court pointed out this 8 morning -- and frankly, it's not one study; it's not,
9 oh, we put one study in our complaint, and the Court 10 has to take that as true. We would submit that 11 that's enough. But there is so much evidence, Your 12 Honor. And I went through that evidence in great 13 detail at the last hearing. It's in the PowerPoint 14 that I didn't go through this morning, but that Your 15 Honor has, and I can file on the docket. There are 16 warning letters from the FDA that, you know --

17 THE COURT: Before I forget, let's make 18 sure we do file it, so I can cite it when I write the 19 opinion.

20 MS. WOLCHANSKY: I will file it, Your 21 Honor, this afternoon.

22 We have the warning letter. We have 23 multiple studies: The 2016 study, the prevalence of 24 reduced harm perceptions clearly demonstrates that a 25 disclaimer is not an effective means to correct the

1 inappropriate harm perception. We have Judge
2 Kessler. We have all of the plaintiffs in this case.
3 That is not insignificant. They have all alleged 4 that they were misled by the misrepresentations on 5 the packaging. We have Santa Fe's own internal 6 documents. We have a 2007 study. We have 63.9
7 percent of smokers -- Natural American cigarette 8 smokers believe their brand was less harmful. As 9 Your Honor pointed out, we have thousands of 10 consumers who have believed and been misled by the 11 representation.

12 So it's not that the Court can't, as a 13 matter of law, ever make a determination at a motion 14 to dismiss. We would not submit that that is the 15 law. But the Court can't weigh the evidence. And 16 here, viewed in the light most favorable to the 17 plaintiffs, taken as true, the allegations in the 18 complaint, there is more than enough here for this 19 case to proceed.

20 The reason why we cite the Williams versus 21 Gerber case, and that the defendants cite all over 22 their briefing regarding the reasonable consumer
23 standard, in that case it's not that the Court found 24 that it was or wasn't misleading. The Court found it 25 couldn't weigh the evidence; it was a question of

1 fact for a jury. And there was laughably less 2 evidence in that case than there is here in the 3 complaint.

4 So, again, it's not that the Court can't, 5 as a matter of law, make determinations. It's that 6 here, when there is plentiful evidence in the 7 complaint, not weighing that evidence, but rather, 8 viewing that evidence in the light most favorable to 9 the plaintiff, we have more than plausibly alleged 10 that there is deception, despite the existence of a 11 disclaimer.

12 And, again, we aren't trying to -- 13 Mr. Schultz has stated multiple times that we have 14 failed to cite any cases where the Court -- you know, 15 that say that the Court can't make a determination.
16 That's just simply not what we're saying. We're 17 saying that an issue like this is a jury question 18 that the Court should find is a question of fact.
19 And to that point, I will turn it over to Ms. McGinn.

1 MS. McGINN: Well, June 9 was my dad's 90th

3 So I think our supplemental brief talks 4 about more than the Williams versus Gerber case as to 5 why this is a question of fact, not a question of 6 law.

7 But we missed a case that was just brought 8 to my attention by the brilliant Mr. Bienvenu this 9 week. That is a New Mexico case that I think 10 addresses this issue probably more powerfully than 11 does Williams versus Gerber. And that is your case, 12 Judge: Martin versus City of Albuquerque, at 147
13 F.Supp. 3d 1298, that you wrote in 2015. And I am 14 embarrassed to say I was unaware of this decision

16 describe, and I would commend to your clerks and your 17 externs to read, what I can only describe as a love

19 And I think it could only have been written by 20 somebody who has actually been in the arena down here 21 in the well of the courthouse and argued to a jury, 22 and seen the magic that happens when people come

24 your opinion is really remarkable, Judge. It talks

1 what is excessive.

2 And even though your discussion in that 3 case is about the Sixth Amendment right to a criminal 4 jury trial, all of the amendments have equal 5 importance. And the Seventh Amendment, the right to 6 civil jury trial is as important as the Sixth 7 Amendment right. And all the things you say in that 8 case, I think, are applicable here, Judge. You said 9 in that case "jury trials send a louder and more 10 definitive message to society than judges' opinions." 11 You said "the process is as important to how this 12 story ends to how the public accepts the end of the 13 story, and how the nation or the community decides 14 that the appearance of justice has been satisfied." 15 You said, "In a democratic society, it should not be 16 as important what a district judge believes, as what 17 the citizens in their jury verdicts decide."

18 But probably the thing that was most 19 touching in the opinion, Judge, was you describing 20 how the process works in New Mexico. The 21 transcendent process that you talked about when, in 22 this fifth largest state, people from all walks of 23 life, from our 21 pueblos, from our four 24 reservations, and people of every race and every 25 creed come together in the courtroom here, and gay,

1 straight, you list all the different kinds of people
2 that come here, religious, nonreligious, agnostics, 3 all come to this courtroom, and in this sacred space
4 here in the courtroom, make a decision for the whole 5 community, and how powerful that is.

6 And in this case, Judge, even though you 7 have the power to make a decision about a motion to 8 dismiss at this level -- although we think the case 9 law says where there is a factual dispute, you can't 10 weigh the evidence -- in this case, it is a group of 21 at that hearing are the same kinds of questions that 22 I expect a jury will ask, and will debate in the jury 23 room. Is the word "natural" true, or is that 24 misleading? Can something be technically true, but 25 mislead people anyway? For example, if I sell

1 strychnine and I label it on the front as "natural 2 and organic," that's true, strychnine is natural and 3 organic. But if I place the thing that it's poison
4 on the side of that, I'm not really telling the whole
5 story when I'm selling that particular product.

6 Does misrepresentation -- is it based on 7 just one word? Can you pull out the word "natural" 8 and say, Well, just look at the rest of it about is 9 it a misrepresentation? We've cited a case Pernod
10 Ricard USA versus Bacardi, at 653 F.3d 241, a Fourth 11 Circuit case. And it says it's not just one word.
12 It's the whole gestalt, the whole marketing process
13 that they do with the green package, and the Native 14 American smoking, and all of this; the use of the 15 word "natural" several places, both in the branding 16 name and also on the packaging, all of that is what 17 the jury has to assess whether a reasonable person 18 could be fooled.

19 And it's not just even the whole gestalt of 20 it, Judge. It's even the order that you place it in.
21 I know the Court is familiar with Daniel Kahneman's 22 book, "Thinking Fast and Slow." No matter how smart 23 we think we are, just the order in which you list 24 things can affect you on a subtle level so you 25 disregard the rest. It's why where they're placing

1 this information on the package is so important. If 2 I tell you: I want you to go out with somebody 3 because they're smart, funny, hard-working, loud,
4 aggressive, and a spendthrift, according to Kahneman,
5 you're likely to go out with that person. But if I
6 just reverse the words: If I say they're loud, 7 aggressive, a spendthrift, smart, funny, and 8 hard-working, you're not going to go out with that 9 person. So even just the order can affect -- and of 10 course, these marketers -- and the tobacco companies 11 know this better than anybody else -- they have all 12 kind of research themselves that show what works on 13 consumers.

14 If there is anything about your opinion,
15 Judge, that I would find fault with, there is one 16 thing that I think you left out in that opinion. And 17 that is the differences in education between people.
18 And I think that's particularly important when you're 19 trying to determine reasonableness. And it says why 20 it should be a group decision, rather than a decision 21 by an individual person or an individual judge.

22 You and I have very similar backgrounds.
23 I've come a long way from Alamogordo, and you've come 24 a long way from Hobbs. And we have been incredibly 25 blessed by the educations that we've had. And we

1 like to I think -- I like to think that I still am in 2 touch with my roots from back there, and I understand 3 what common people and reasonable people think. But, 4 in fact, whenever I do focus groups, I realize that 5 there are people who don't have the benefits that I
6 have, that think differently than I do, and are more 7 easily fooled than I am. And that's why people with 8 advanced degrees should step back and not exercise 9 their authority to make decisions on what's 10 reasonable, and let a jury decide the factual basis 11 for what's reasonable and how people can be fooled.

12 I want to end with a quote from your case, 13 that you say: "There are times to write opinions and 14 there are times to try cases." And this particular 15 case about whether this fools people or not, this is 16 a case that should be tried to the jury. And I want 17 to thank you for that great opinion, by the way.

18 Thanks, Judge.

19 THE COURT: All right. Thank you, Ms.

20 McGinn.

21 Mr. Schultz, anything further you want to 22 say on the misrepresentations, supplemental briefing?

23 MR. SCHULTZ: Just very briefly, Your 24 Honor. I'm not one to stand up and be more eloquent 25 than Ms. McGinn. And I hate to follow her in the 1 courtroom.

2 There is a reason that case was not cited
3 in any of the parties' briefing. That case dealt 4 with a motion for summary judgment. That case dealt 5 with this Court's determination that there was a 6 triable issue because there were disputed issues of 7 fact and issues that a jury should decide rather than 8 being resolved at a summary judgment stage.

9 This case, Your Honor, is not at that 10 stage. This case is before you in your function as a 11 gatekeeper, in measuring the adequacy of the 12 pleadings. There are many, many steps between now 13 and a jury trial. And everything Ms. McGinn said 14 about the power of a jury and why we have jury trials 15 is certainly true. But that is not to say that every 16 single case, simply because it is filed, goes to a 17 jury. Why? Because there are rules. There are 18 requirements that must be met before we get to that 19 stage. And I assume, Your Honor, that if we get to 20 the summary judgment stage, we will hear the precise 21 same argument that Ms. McGinn just gave, and probably 22 citing the Martin case back to this Court, as well it 23 should be cited at that stage.

24 But at this stage, Your Honor, the more 25 important opinion for this Court to look to is not

1 your opinions, Your Honor. It's what the U.S.
2 Supreme Court has told you is your obligation as a 3 judge as to what must be satisfied by the plaintiffs 4 in their pleadings before the case goes forward.

5 And we would urge the Court to look at the 6 Supreme Court's rulings in Twombly and Ashcroft.
7 Look at the cases that we've cited to the Court with 8 regard to what other district courts and other courts 9 of appeals have done in looking at the alleged 10 misrepresentation, as set forth in the pleadings, and 11 measuring the adequacy of those allegations against 12 the actual misrepresentation, and that, in making the 13 decision, as a matter of law, whether those would 14 deceive a reasonable consumer.

15 THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Schultz.

16 Mr. Schultz, Mr. Biersteker, do y'all have 17 anything else on your motion to dismiss that you want 18 to argue or bring up?

19 MR. SCHULTZ: I think we're done, Your 20 Honor.

21 THE COURT: All right. Ms. Wolchansky, is 22 there anything further you want on the motion?

23 MS. WOLCHANSKY: Nothing further.

24 THE COURT: All right. So if I understand
25 it, it's now in my court. And the way we've got it

1 scheduled is that nothing happens until I issue 2 written opinions and orders on this. Is that 3 everybody's memory? My oral inclinations up here
4 don't get it done. I have to put an order in place 5 before y'all start filing answers and things. Is 6 that the way the plaintiffs understand it?

7 MR. SCHULTZ: Your Honor, certainly as to 8 the answer, that's correct.

9 THE COURT: Isn't that the next thing after 10 me? After I get the opinion and order out, then the 11 answers take place on our case management order?

12 MR. SCHULTZ: With regard to the pleading
13 stage, that's correct, Your Honor.

14 THE COURT: Okay.

15 MS. WOLCHANSKY: We are continuing to 16 conduct discovery and meet and confer. We will come 17 to the Court if we have any issues in discovery that 18 we need Your Honor's assistance with.

19 THE COURT: All right. Well, I'll see what 20 we can do about me trying to finish this opinion up.
21 I'm a little bit concerned about -- I've got a trial
22 I'm doing for the judges up in the Northern District 23 of Oklahoma right at the beginning of September, and 24 it's beginning to overshadow a lot of stuff I'm 25 trying to do here. So it may be a little bit after
